Do you anticipate a spate of lawsuits arising from COVID-19? If so, what kind?

Absolutely. We anticipate a wave of contract and commercial real estate litigation as businesses seek to get out of or enforce their obligations under agreements and leases. We also predict a slew of insurance coverage disputes as business owners attempt to get reimbursed under their business interruption policies. No one has ever interpreted how this coverage applies to a pandemic with a government-ordered shutdown, so both insurers and insureds will be looking for judicial guidance. Finally, the wave of bankruptcy filings, which have already begun, will continue and will keep bankruptcy and litigation attorneys busy for years to come.
